For immediate release:

The Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy on Monday released a special issue, "Law and the War on Terrorism." The issue presents articles by over 20 of the most respected legal scholars in the country on issues that face America in her battle against those who perpetrated the attacks of September 11. The issues range from Patriotism in the face of foreign hatred to the legality of President Bush's planned military tribunals.

Notable authors include Government officials, such as Assistant Attorneys General John Yoo and Viet Dinh, and Deputy General Counsel for the Office of Homeland Security Robert J. Delahunty, legal academics, such as Harvard Law School Professors Richard Parker and Philip Heyman, University of Chicago Law School Professors Cass Sunstein and Eric Posner, University of Virginia Law School Professor Robert F. Turner and American University's Kenneth Anderson, as well as others on the front lines of the war on terrorism.

The Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy is the most widely distributed student-edited law journal in the country. It is also America's leading outlet for conservative and libertarian legal scholarship. For more information about this project please contact:

Christopher Posteraro: Editor-in-Chief, cpostera@law.harvard.edu, (617) 495-3105

J.R. Parker: Deputy Editor-in-Chief, jparker@law.harvard.edu

Ken Bellaire: Managing Editor, kbellaire@law.harvard.edu

The Journal staff will be happy to arrange for interested persons to get in touch with any of the contributing authors.

Persons interested in ordering copies of the Special Issue should send a check for $20 made out to the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy to the above address or should call (617) 495-3105 or email jlpp@law.harvard.edu for further inquiry.

A portion of the proceeds from this Special Issue will be donated to the Pentagon Assistance Fund.
